Local Manufacturer Donates 40 Handmade Blankets to Celebrate 40th Anniversary

Washington, PA, December 8, 2016 - Washington Rotating Control Heads (Washington Rotating), a Washington County manufacturer of drilling equipment, is celebrating its 40th year in business. In order to commemorate the occasion, the Washington Rotating staff made 40 fleece tie blankets to donate to local organizations. On November 23rd, the staff set up an assembly line in their office to complete the blankets.

“This has been a very challenging year for our industry and a lot of companies have not made it through,” said Washington Rotating owner, Joyce Mayernik. “We’re very thankful to be celebrating our 40th anniversary and want to take the opportunity to give back to our community. Making fleece tie blankets is a great team building activity for our staff and will produce a helpful donation item for many local charities.”

The completed blankets will be distributed between four local charities, which include the Washington City Mission, Domestic Violence Services of Southwestern PA, Salvation Army of Washington County and the Washington Area Humane Society. The blankets, which consist of two pieces of fleece fabric knotted together, will provide warmth and comfort for their recipients during the upcoming winter months.

Kelly L. Young, Donations & Resources Coordinator at Domestic Violence Services of Southwestern PA, explained, “When the clients come in with their children, the children are often afraid. We like to give them their own blanket to cuddle with. It is like their own security blanket. The mothers really appreciate it.”
